

A LATE INCUMBENT.

Fiddling Jimmie's Resignation After Giving His Visitors Much Good Time.

The Southwestern Stage Company needed a man to take care of a relay station, down in No. Man's Land, known on their books as No. 13. As no one who knew the country could be persuaded to go there for love or money, it was a case of anybody at all. Hence it was that "Fiddling Jimmie," fresh from an eastern Kansas farm, was sent down to fill the vacancy. He was tall, lank, red-haired, and he carried a black, shiny catched in one hand and a violin case in the other. The office people told him it was a lone some place, but he said he didn't care so long as they kept him in grub and his fiddle strings staid with him. They failed to tell him that the last man there had been found with a bullet in his head a few yards from his dugout, and that all the mules had been run off either by rustlers or Indians straying up from the territory reservations. It might have made some difference had Jimmie been told this, but he was not. No. 13 was a lonesome place. Twice a week each way a buckboard came by with the driver and a Tascosa mail. The mules were changed, a sack of flour or a bale of hay was dumped off, and then Jimmie was left to himself and the solace of his violin. The station consisted simply of a corral and a dugout in a high bank overlooking a deep waterhole in a creek. Jimmie vet a line in the hole and always had fish for dinner. He shot wild game at times, and the report ran around among the drivers that "the blamed fool at No. 13 was getting fat and fresh in his talk."

Things went on until the summer passed into the early autumn. It was night. Jimmie had eaten his supper, and was sitting on his solitary stool sawing away for dear life on the violin, at peace with the world and himself, while up the creek valley came stealing Big Tooth Yellow Horse and seven other proteges of the government, fresh from the reservation, bent on cattle stealing, thievery of any kind and general devilry. So silently and swiftly did they file in the dugout that Jimmie only had time to lower his bow and stare open-eyed across the vanished surface of the instrument, while the fragrance of their many unwashed years filled the little interior. The Indians calmly squatted in a circle around him and Big Tooth, patting his Winchester with one hand, pointed with the other at the violin and solemnly grunted out:

"Play tune."

Jimmie played at once with energy. When he wanted to stop another buck, with the same movement, made the same command, and Jimmie played again. Then another command, and still another. The night advanced. Occasionally a mule outside brayed, a coyote howled, but there was no cessation of "Getting Up Stairs," "Cotton-eyed Joe," "The Arkansas Traveler," and all the melodies in Jimmie's repertoire. The late moon rose, still it was "Play tune," and Jimmie played. Midnight passed away and the early hours of dawn. It grew first gray, then rose-colored over the east, still the strains of music floated out from the mouth of the dugout. Just when it grew good daylight, Big Tooth and his companions arose, possessed themselves of Jimmie's ammunition and gun, and also of sundry portable articles and with a parting "Much good time," betook themselves off to other parts.

Along about 12 o'clock the man who ran station No. 12, down on the Beaver, happened to look out of the open doorway of his cabin. He saw a black dot way up the valley. The dot was moving. It soon resolved itself into a larger shape, and moving arms and legs became discernible. Then it soon became manifest that it was a red-haired man on a very tired mule, riding for dear life. Then the mule stopped, tired and blown, at the door, and the man keeled over in a dead faint. He had a fiddle in one hand and a bow in the other. The fiddle strings were broken and the bow bent, for they had been used on the mule's sides with energy and vim. "Fiddling Jimmie" had resigned.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Australian Loyalty.

The Sydney Bulletin, on the opening of that glided piece of humbug, the Imperial Institute, says: "Queen Victoria, seated on a golden throne, presented her by some toadying Oriental nigger with pipe-stem legs, opened the Imperial Institute, the buildings where of have now been 'dedicated' by the Archbishop of Canterbury. Dedicated to what? To a system of complex tyranny that usurps many of the prerogatives of the Almighty! To a thieving hierarchy that footpads the mean savings of dissenting religionists! To the incubus of royalty that bestraddles all the smaller tyrannies, and arrogantly sanctifies its own and their plunderings with the double seal of sanctimony and blasphemy, and this while the gaunt millions of London and Hull and all England offer their starving bodies to the bayonets of hiring soldiery, in despair of earning the price of other carrion. Can heaven and hell make a stronger contrast of rampant magnificence and desiccated squalor?"

In one of the earliest trials before a colored jury in Texas the twelve gentlemen were told by the judge to "retire and find the verdict." They went into the jury-room, whence the opening and shutting of doors and other sounds of unusual commotion were presently heard. At last the jury came back into court, where the foreman announced: "We hab looked every-whar, judge, for that verdict—in de drawers and behind de doahs, but it ain't nowhar in that blessed room."

Aim at the Drake

And you are bound to hit some of the ducks. This is precisely the same with

Wampole's Tasteless Preparation

OF Cod Liver Oil.

It aims to cure Consumption, Hits the Mark, too, and it most effectively breaks up Colds, Coughs, Hoarseness and all Throat and Lung troubles that cause this disease.

It is natural logic to conclude that if WAMPOLE'S PREPARATION OF COD LIVER OIL has power to prevent Consumption, it surely is able to cure these lesser emergencies.

This vigor-making, fat producing preparation is Absolutely Tasteless. In so far as Cod Liver Oil is concerned. All you notice is a delightful flavor of Wild Cherry and Anise.

But the purest Norwegian Cod Liver Oil is there all the same. It is a great blood enricher. Best of all it is a natural food that in its stomachic effects, actually assists its own assimilation.

In Pulmonary or Bronchial troubles it is unequalled. No one doubts the value of Cod Liver Oil, but not every one is able to take it.

WAMPOLE'S PREPARATION removes the nauseous objection and actually makes Cod Liver Oil palatable.
